We belong to a Reform Synagogue and my mother was converted before she married, so that her children are Jewish. We have always kept a Kosher home and follow the Jewish tradition, with all that it entails. If one of us children wishes to marry a person belonging to an Orthodox Synagogue, would we have to be converted and would we have to be married in a Reform Synagogue?

11-3, 39a

Following on from the above, my family, who hail from Salonika, do not eat either rice or potatoes on Pesach since both are considered chametz. The only way they could possibly be eaten is by being served very hot before the starch has allowed to form, in which case they could burn the tongue (photo)
